

Luton have been on tour this week, and a very unsuccessful tour it has been. They started with Darwen on Tuesday, where we all hoped they would be capable of securing a victory. But Darwen, who had won only one other League match this season, beat Luton by four goals to one. On Wednesday, Newton Heath was visited, and the verdict was five goals to nil—against Luton, of course. The consequence is that Luton are not quite out of the wood yet, as they want another point to make them absolutely safe. Blackpool have 18 joints for 32 matches, as against Luton's 21 for the same number of games, and if Blackpool should win their two remaining matches and Luton lose theirs, Luton would have to stand their chance of re-election at the meeting of the League.
