

A POINTLESS DRAW AT NORTHAMPTON.

On Monday Luton were away at Northampton. The game was very evenly contested. R. Hawkes gave way to Williams. The locals faced the wind in the first half, and had rather the best of the play, though they were never really dangerous. They forced a number of corners, but in all cases they were rather easily cleared. Luton had the upper hand in the second moiety, and played rather better, making one or two onslaughts on the visitors' citadel. Northampton retaliated, and although both goals had some narrow escapes, the match ended in a pointless draw.
