

Luton's gift goal sinks Colchester

Colchester0 Luton1

BOTH teams ruined intelligent midfield work by slipshod finishing, and it was typical of the football that Luton's winning goal should be a gift.

It came midway through the first half when Aitchison, with all the time in the world to clear his lines, tried to dribble across the goalmouth, and was robbed by Whittaker, who gave Ames no chance with a low shot.

For the rest of the first period Luton, inspired by wing-half Lownds, had the better of exchanges but failed to turn them into goals.

The second half saw a complete change of picture—play was mainly in the Luton half.
