LUTON director Jim Richardson didn't like manager Harry Haslam's second-half player substitution—and told him so in a few heated words after the match.

"Then it was my turn," said Haslam. "So I had a good clear-the-air talk. "Now I've got someone else to talk to—Jimmy Armfield. I'm going to phone him and wish Leeds the best of luck against Spurs."

Haslam called off centre defender Steve Litt and brought on young striker Andy King in the 70th minute when Luton, trailing by a goal, were desperate for a point.

Two minutes later Luton had equalised and substitute King was there helping Jimmy Ryan's cross into the net.

It was sheer spirit that saved Luton the point and at least 52 hours more in the First Division.

City looked the more skilful outfit, though the Rodney Marsh magic was missing and Terry Keegan substituted for him in the second half.

Yet you can't keep Marsh out of the act even if he's not playing. After his departure he sat bare to the waist with the Luton fans on the touch-line.

The referee had told him his Manchester City shirt was interfering with play!
