THREE MORE goals kept the Town on course for promotion and the Second Division championship. But after they had disposed of Rotherham United at Kenilworth Road, visiting manager Emlyn Hughes pinpointed the Town's trump card as the defence rather than the attack.

As a former Liverpool and England defender, his judgement may have been slightly biased, but he had no moans about the justice of the final result, even if Rotherham had looked like snatching a point at one stage.

Two goals in a minute half-an-hour from the end finished them off to give the Town the sort of victory they will have to look for in most home matches for the rest of the season.

Visiting sides come to Luton with an inbuilt inferiority complex. So they should, knowing they are meeting the team which looks like running away with the championship, and has the best scoring record in the Second Division.

Priority has to be given to trying to frustrate the Town's attack, and hope to catch them on the break now and again.

Visitors will work to try to stop the Town playing their natural flowing football and Rotherham managed that for the best part of an hour. They kept the score-sheet blank until half-time, and might have been a goal up at the interval, because Ronnie Moore put a clean chance wide in the fifth minute.

The excitement, and triumph of class over honest hard work, came after the break, even though Rotherham pinched an equaliser after the Town had at last gone ahead.

Said Hughes: "At 1-1 we had done what we set out to do. We had frustrated Luton, but they had defended well. I think they defend better than they attack. Teams get drawn in, and then Luton put the goals in at the other end."

Rotherham's only real attacking threat came from the pace of Tony Towner, and it took Mark Aizlewood a long time to keep him quiet. But the full-back came through to accomplish that vital job after some early scares, helped by the good covering of his back four colleagues, and Rotherham's 57th-minute equaliser came as a distinct shock.

The day's individual star was again Ricky Hill. The Town used more long-ball passing than usual, but when he was given a chance to use his talents Rotherham were on the rack.

Time and again he combined his two most impressive skills — the ability to take men on and go past them with the ball, and then the perception and skill to deliver a telling final pass.

In the 49th minute he did it down the Town's left-wing, to give Steve White his 12th goal of the season from a low cross to the far post.

The Town defence was in disarray when Rotherham got back into the game in the 57th minute. A long free-kick by Gerry Forrest was allowed to go through into the net, with Rod Fern claiming that he got the final touch with a wisp of hair to score against one of his old clubs.

White and Brian Stein began to increase the pressure on their markers, and David Moss, playing deep for much of the time to start Town attacks, got better each minute.

His deep corner regained the lead in the 63rd minute — a move practised regularly in training paid off again when Mal Donaghy raced up beyond the far post to send a looping header into the net. Within a minute, Hill's brilliant through-pass produced finishing power to match it as Stein cracked in the Town's third.

Manager Hughes, cheerful and friendly, took defeat with very good grace, and became the latest in a long line of managers who think the Town are now too good for the Second Division. He's quite right, too.
